Jet nose-dives into field, killing crew, passengers

by Michael Haddigan
The Associated Press

ALIQUIPPA, Pa. -- A USAir jetliner nose-dived into a field while trying to land near Pittsburgh on Thursday, killing all 131 people on board. It was the deadliest crash in the United States in seven years.

Flight 427 originated at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport and was to stop in Pittsburgh before continuing to West Palm Beach, Fla.

"I looked up and there it was," said Tom Michel, who was at a gas station near the crash site. "It was just coming straight down. I was screaming for everybody to run. It looked like it was under full power and he just went straight in."

Air traffic controllers said they lost contact with the plane when it was about seven miles from the airport, said Pat Boyle, a spokesman for the Allegheny County Department of Aviation. He said a report of an explosion before the crash could not be confirmed.

Michel said there was a "big boom and the sky lit up. There was black smoke everywhere and that was it."

Witnesses reported a gruesome carnage in a clearing on a heavily-wooded ravine.

"All we saw was body parts hanging from the trees," said

Denise Godich, a nurse who was one of the first at the scene. "There were people everywhere. You could just see parts of them."

Another eyewitness said pieces of plane and baggage were scattered throughout the area.

"We have done a fairly extensive search of the area and there are no survivors," said Jim Eichenlaub, manager of Hopewell Township and coordinator of emergency services at the scene.

The plane's black box, which records flight data, was recovered, he said.

Emergency crews put out the fire and the search was called off about two hours after the crash. The area was sealed off for the night, but off-road vehicles were spotted heading to the crash site.

The Boeing 737 was carrying 126 passengers and a crew of five, said Dave Shipley, a spokesman for the airline.

The plane went down shortly after 7 p.m. in a Hopewell Township field about seven miles from the airport, which is 20 miles northwest of Pittsburgh.

"I looked up and there it was. It was just coming straight down."

Tom Michel
witness of the crash

Linda Jones said she was standing on her porch when she saw the plane turn to the right, turn over once or twice, and go down behind some trees.

"The engines just went dead," eyewitness Sandra Zuback told CNN. "It just blew up."

Shipley said the weather was clear and there was no indication of any problems.

It was the fourth fatal USAir crash in the past five years.

On July 2, a USAir jetliner crashed in a thunderstorm near the Charlotte-Douglas International Airport in North Carolina, killing 37 of the 57 people on board.

A USAir plane crashed March 22, 1992, on takeoff in a snowstorm at La Guardia Airport in New York. Twenty-seven people were killed.

On Feb. 1, 1991, a USAir plane and a commuter plane collided on Los Angeles airport runway; 34 were killed.

Former student retains open attitude

Nick Licate, student body president during the 1968-69 academic year, answers a fellow student's question. Licate is now an insurance broker in Seattle.

by Robin Coe
The BG News

Editor's note: This is the first part in a continuing series about people who have made an impact on the University.

In the culturally rich city of Seattle, a man who led the student body in 1968-69 through the most controversial period the University has ever experienced, is living an alternative lifestyle that fits into his view of life, politics and pleasure.

Nick Licate was the Student Council President in 1968-69 -- a period of mass movements within the U.S. and the University. He had the job of governing students during the Vietnam War -- a difficult time for many.

He was involved in the March 5, 1969 "illegal" open house that took place in Rodgers Hall to protest open house policy and other policies of the residence halls. This protest and the voice of Licate and his student government changed the residence hall structure into what it is today.

"The dormitories were operated like child-care facilities," Licate said during a phone interview. "I wasn't the primary organizer [of the protest]," he added.

However, Licate said he agreed with the messages behind the protest.

"The whole philosophy is that institutions of higher education should create individuals of society," he said.

The residence halls essentially took over the responsibility of parenthood when students entered the University. However, students did not agree that the University should be a family paradigm. Instead, they believed it should be an institution of government.

During a March 1969 University Board of Trustees meeting, Licate and many other students walked out when they were refused recognition by President Jerome. Jerome refused to recognize Licate and refused to recognize the African-American students of the newly formed Black Student Union.

"We [myself and Jerome] had a very formal, if not icy, relationship," Licate said.

He said there was a lot of bitterness between them because Licate opposed the war and believed in protests. However, Jerome had different opinions.

"Protesting was not honorable and not good for the [University]," he said. "[Jerome] wouldn't permit it."

Jerome was also bitter because of the power Licate gained for the student council -- now called the Undergraduate Student Government. Licate changed the entire direction of the legislative body.

Student government presidents in the past had been considerably conservative and usually were members of the Greek community, and thus Greek-oriented, he said.

"I was the first non-Greek president," he said.

Licate pushed for representation from the Black Student Union in the student council and also for more female representation on the campus as a whole.

The student government was only considered an advisory entity until he was elected. Despite the benevolence of the administration, he gained political power for student government.

"No one gives the power," he said. "You pretty much have to fight for it."

Ear to the ground...

Long lines at the Bursar are nothing new, long lines at the registrar office are nothing new, long lines in financial aid are nothing new, but it comes to our attention that if these on-going problems cannot be solved, at the very least we can see some semblance of organization of the offices.

Why is financial aid on the opposite end of campus from the Bursar Office? To us this seems like putting toilet paper on one end of the campus and the toilets on the other. Or putting the bottle in McFall and the shot glass in the Union. Or... well you get the point.

The Non-Academic Functions Committee and University President Paul Olscamp are recommending they combine these services -- hopefully this will happen soon.

Somebody has done a bad, bad thing to the rock between Kreischer and Harshman quadrangles. When the University awoke Wednesday morning, the slogan "Incest is best," was emblazoned on the sacred rock. Besides saying a lot about the family who painted the rock, it is what we call an eyesore.

EAR feels the culprits could have at least been a little more creative in their choice of slogans. Perhaps adding the phrase, "PJO is a A-S-S or Kiss me I'm a rock," would be a bit more appropriate.

Hey, this rock has been a symbol of University fun and mahem for many years and is something students should enjoy painting. But, Jeez Louise, if you're going to paint the rock, don't be dumb.

Remember -- the Black Swamp Festival is happening this weekend. It's a great place to see local art and hear local bands like The Kind. It's also a good place to people-watch, for those of you who are into that kind of thing. And a little bird told me beers were just a dollar. So if you've got the time and a couple of bucks head on downtown to frolic with the townies.

Congratulations to the newly elected USG "senators." EAR just hopes all the new-found power doesn't go to your heads. With all of this bringing up of things, "suggesting" items and rewriting of resumes, we just hope you still have time to wait in line for the bars.

Baseball exposed on the lube rack

It has been brought to my attention that sometimes I have a difficult time coming to a point. So if you're looking for a 'rule to live by,' skip now to paragraph 19. But if you're looking for a little something to brighten your 9:30 a.m. class, Read on, young warrior, read on.

Pucker up and get ready 'cause the world's turning upside down this morning. I'm talking about the strike. Yes, as you know, it's been about a month since the baseball players decided the owners weren't playing fair and took their collective balls home. And with today being "B-Day," the day when we find out if the boys of summer are going back to the park, I decided to engage in a little fantasy role playing.

Not the kind of fantasy that has me picking my nose in the back-seat of a car in an Aerosmith video, but almost as fun.

Let's pretend that instead of a baseball strike the country was crippled by an auto mechanic strike. It's kinda fun when you think about the possibilities. Kids running around vying for famous auto mechanic cards. The cards would have stats like: brakes repaired in a season; mufflers changed per year; transmissions plugged; girls called 'honey' and given a discount because they showed cleavage; number of successful tire rotations in a year; etc.

His bio under the stats might read: "Joey Buttafuoco (yes, big Joe was an auto mechanic), a 32 year-old veteran out of Trenton, N.J. has lived in the town his entire life. A consistent performer, Joey has been turning in 40-hour work weeks as long as he's been able to work. Although he often comes home with greasy hands and clothes, Joey still enjoys a good hug from his wife Mary Jo. On weekends, Joey enjoys popping open a smooth Old Mill, going fishing with his buddies and coaching high school softball."

You have to ask yourself if there was an auto mechanics' strike would radio talk show hosts find themselves saying things like, "Hey, just because they're tired of working under the rack all day, getting oil spilled on them and having waitress glare at their dirty fingernails, does that mean that they have to let the kids down?"

"I mean, the average mechanic makes almost $450 a week, has a relatively rust-free Chevy Nova, two kids, some food and a two-bedroom house. C'mon, what's he want for playing the game of auto mechanics?" Kind of fun, huh?

Wait, it gets better. Imagine if auto mechanics were watched with the same amount of vigor that fans and media displayed for baseball. We'll call it Auto Mechanic Mania. And let's pretend for just one moment that Dick Vitale and Ricki Lake were paired together to call a match of Auto Mechanic Mania.

The call might go something like this:

"Joe Customer is a man who has had some squeaky brakes for the past two weeks. For the past three days, the squeaking has become so loud, Joe is afraid his wife will find out he is cheating on her with their underage neighbor," Ricki says with that algae-sucker face she makes.

"To solve his problem, Joe's come to Mike the Mechanic. Do you want to meet this guy?!" she screams orgasmically.

Enter Vitale, beady eyes ablaze.

"Joe Customer is in the work area -- it appears he's talking things over with Mike. Take a look at Mike's eyes. The way he looks over the car. I'll tell ya, is there no more exciting sport than Auto Mechanic Mania?" Vitale says.

I love Dick Vitale. You know that no matter what the sport, it can't be long before he starts making up terms.

"Look at this kid, he can really dance around the barn. He's a real 'U.H.P.'er, Under-the-Hood Player, baby. You know what I mean, Ricki," Vitale says.

"Well, Dick..." Ricki says, before she was cut off like an Amish kid who gets a tattoo.

"He's got the car up on the rack baby!! It's like he's saying, 'give me the ratchet, give me the ratchet!'," Vitale screams.

"Mike is really trying to fix this car. He's living proof that you can do anything if you put your mind to it," Ricki says, beginning one of her soliloquies.

"I mean, I was fat once. One day I just decided to lose weight and look at me now," Ricki says, pleading for fat people ratings.

"Here he goes, he's got the left brake shoe off. He's replacing it ... the ratchet's in -- Ooh foul bolt! Ladies and gentlemen, the nut didn't fit the bolt. He's got a new bolt -- it's on, going, going, going, it's in there, baby! Mike has fixed the brakes! Mike has fixed the brakes! I'll tell you Ricki, no one can fix a set of brakes like Mike," Vitale says, ending the broadcast.

Which brings me to my point, it's almost assumed that baseball players are irreplaceable. "No one can hit the ball like Barry Bonds. Greg Maddux is the best pitcher of all time."

Overlooked is how important and irreplaceable a good brake man is to you.

Really. I mean, if a batter strikes out, he goes back to the dugout and gets a fresh wad of tobacco. If the brake guy screws up your brakes, you could fly through the windshield and be known for the rest of your life as 'Johnny No-face,' and that's no fun.

So the next time your mechanic fixes your brakes and the guy does a good job, say thank you, pat him on the back and ask for his autograph. If you're lucky maybe he'll sign your famous mechanics card.

Contestant upsets American Indians

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — A Miss America contestant who dances in buckskin under a burial scaffold for her talent routine is fighting attacks from American Indians who call the portrayal inaccurate and insulting.

Miss South Dakota Kristi Lynn Bauer said she still plans to perform the interpretive dance in the national pageant that begins Monday.

"It's to honor the Native American culture," Bauer said Wednesday.

Others don't see it that way. "The issue here is you don't do a dance routine in a cemetery," said South Dakota Commissioner of Indian Affairs Francis Whitebird.

Several Indian groups have asked Bauer, a blue-eyed blonde who says she is part Indian, to drop the routine.

"Even after being told that she will be insulting Native Americans and making a mockery of their spirituality, ... [Bauer] has not changed her plans to perform a dance dressed in a buckskin dress under a tribal burial scaffold," the American Indian Community House Inc. said Wednesday.

Settlement reached in AIDS case

SAVANNAH, Ga. — An $850,000 legal settlement will be split among 495 former patients of a dentist who died after contracting AIDS, even though none of the patients has tested positive for the virus that causes the disease.

The settlement, formalized Friday, is believed to be the first in Georgia based on claims of emotional suffering from a fear of contracting AIDS, said Brent Savage, the plaintiffs' lawyer.

The organism that causes it may be carried in food, water or feces.

The most common way shigellosis is spread is "person-to-person, through dirty hands," said Robert French, supervisor of infectious diseases in the epidemiology unit at the health department.

Hand-washing is a critical factor in preventing the spread of shigellosis, French said. Hands always should be washed after changing a child's diaper or helping him or her go to the bathroom.

About 600 of 1,734 passengers and 40 of 612 crew members on a cruise ship sailing round-trip from San Pedro, Calif., to Ensenada, Mexico, were stricken by shigellosis last week. One person died.

Ohioans infected by bacteria

COLUMBUS — A bacterial disease that sickened about 640 people aboard a cruise ship last week also hit Ohioans in high numbers last year, the health department said.

More than 1,400 cases of shigellosis were reported to the Ohio Department of Health in 1993, up from 355 in 1992.

The health department said the number of cases reported last year was the highest reported in 14 years. Officials do not know the cause of the increase.

In nearly 1,300 cases where age was known, about half occurred in children under 6, and about 290 of those were associated with outbreaks at day-care centers. The centers provide ample opportunities for infection because infants and toddlers touch dirty surfaces and put their hands into their mouths.

Petition turnout for USG rises Fewer off-campus students take part in voting process

by Robin Coe
The BG News

Undergraduate Student Government experienced a raise in petition turnout for district senators this year, although voter turnout dropped.

At the USG district senator elections Wednesday, 761 student votes were cast, a 0.2 percent drop from last year. There was an 11 percent increase in student petitions.

"I think I was pleased with the voter turnouts and results," USG President Jennifer Mathe said.

The turnout for on-campus voters was up from last year, but the turnout for off-campus students went down. USG had hoped for a better turnout compared to past years.

"I think it's the intense competition [of the elections that pleased me]," Mathe said.

Vice President Bill Wilson said he had hoped for a higher voter turnout and more campaigning activity.

"I was disappointed to not see some senators out campaigning," Wilson said.

Matthew Hoostal, district one senator, said now that he has been elected he would like to work with general fee expenditures and parking problems, as well as improve USG.

"I want to see the Mathe-Wilson administration do well," Hoostal said.

Chelsea Herriott, district two senator, and Amanda Herriott, off-campus district senator, said they are concerned about campus safety.

"We need to make improvements if people are still being attacked on campus," Amanda Herriott said. She said the lighting on campus needs to be checked and construction areas need better security.

Alan Grottle, district five senator, said he would like to get students more involved in USG.

"Not enough people are interested in USG," Grottle said.

Brian Dicken, off-campus senator, said he is concerned about getting off-campus students involved in USG and finding solutions to the parking problem.

Kim Vargo, district three senator, said she would like to create a forum with Kohl and Founders Hall to inform them of events happening in USG.

"I would like to represent the residents of Founders and Kohl Hall to the best of my ability," Vargo said.

Other district senators could not be reached for comment.

There will be a USG meeting Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the McFall Center. The new district senators will be sworn in at the meeting.

ASC's top priority is communication

by Lawrence Hannan
The BG News

Developing a stronger base of communications with students, faculty and the administration is a top priority of the Administrative Staff Council.

ASC Chairwoman Pat Green said she believes improving communication within the University community is especially important now that the search for a new University president has begun.

"Like a lot of other organizations, we plan to be involved and offer input in the selection of the new president," Green said. "As a result, it's very important that our message and our communication to various administration officials be clear and precise."

"We'd like to continue to devise a more consistent standard evaluation form for the administration," Green said. "We'd also like to work on and improve the daycare issue. We're also looking to increase the scholarships we offer and look at the non-academic functions report that just came out."

Chairman-elect Bryan Benner said he agrees with Green that the council should try to improve its communication with other University constituents.

"Some people have said that they don't have a real good idea of what it is we do," Benner said. "We'd like to improve that."

Looking ahead to this year, Benner said he believes there is a lot for the council to do.

"We have some input with the search [committee] that is choosing the new president," Benner said.

Campus fraternity honors freshmen Sigma Phi Epsilon rewards two men with scholarship funds

by Jennifer Schab
The BG News

Imagine being in a balancing act in a talent show - trying to stabilize a plate with an apple on it on the tip of your nose while standing on one foot. It would be quite a difficult task.

Believe it or not, quite a number of people perform equally challenging balancing acts on a regular basis by juggling schoolwork, job, athletics, community service and social activities in their everyday lives.

To help recognize those people who perform such acts, members of the Sigma Phi Epsilon Fraternity offered the Balanced Man Scholarship to freshman males who meet the qualifications of "a balanced man."

Freshmen Brian Ferritto and Scott Kerekes were the recipients of this year's scholarships.

Ferritto received a check for $500 and Kerekes received a $250 check at a reception that took place last week at the Sigma Phi Epsilon House. The money given to the winners was raised from alumni donations and from funds budgeted with the fraternity's dues.

This particular scholarship was founded at the national level of the fraternity.

In order to discover who met the criteria and who did not, hopefuls filled out informal applications that could be obtained from guidance counselors in Ohio high schools.

Application requirements included information concerning G.P.A., hours of community service, employment, academic honors, as well as involvement in organizations, athletics and social groups.

These applications allowed a panel of executive board members from Sigma Phi Epsilon to narrow down the list of 35 applicants to 18. Each male was then either interviewed in his home over the summer or interviewed recently on campus.

"I was really surprised ... I didn't think I would win it," Kerekes said. "I knew all of my hard work and involvement would pay off."

Kerekes was a varsity wrestler and soccer player, a member of Students Against Drunk Driving and a member of a social action group.

"I was really surprised ... I didn't think I would win it. I knew all of my hard work and involvement would pay off."

Scott Kerekes

Matt Bachman, president of Sigma Phi Epsilon, said the reason they started the scholarship was so they could encourage young men to incorporate the values and beliefs in diversity in studies, athletics and social activities that the fraternity holds in high esteem.

It also helps the fraternity to get to know new freshmen, and in part give them information to help with possible recruiting.

"The balanced man is a symbol of Sigma Phi Epsilon," Bachman said. "Sigma Phi Epsilon had the highest G.P.A. for active members last spring, was No. 1 in community service and came in third in the all-sports intramural standings."

Bachman said even though Sigma Phi Epsilon is promoting its values, the recipients of the scholarships are in no way expected to join the fraternity.

neering and the behavioral and social sciences.

"These recipients have paved the way for a stronger economy, a healthier society and an improved quality of life for all of us," said Jack Gibbons, President Clinton's science adviser.

In his introduction, Gibbons referred to Hammond as "the pre-eminent educator of the century in his field." Hammond said he was very honored to have received the award and expressed gratitude to his colleagues who helped him in his work.

"I am also grateful that life has given me the opportunity to do something which I have genuinely enjoyed and which I believe has also contributed in some small measure to whole-some growth of the total human experience," he said.

Hammond is being recognized for his contribution to the field of organic photochemistry, according to Douglas C. Neckers, executive director of the University's Center for Photochemical Sciences. Hammond's work has had commercial applications such as computer chip design and improvements in photography and color copying, Neckers said.

Neckers said Hammond is in residence at the University's Center for Photochemical Sciences one week every month.

During that week he meets with individual students, faculty, administration and post-doctorate associates.

"Hammond interacts with students at all levels by serving as their adviser, discussing their research progress and their progress as scientists," Neckers said.

Hammond has been affiliated with the University since 1981.

The other recipients of this year's award were: Albert W. Overhauser, a Purdue University physicist; Frank Press, a distinguished geophysicist; Elizabeth Neufeld, chairwoman of the UCLA Department of Biological Chemistry; John Cocke, a retired IBM fellow; Thomas Eisner, Cornell University Biologist; Robert K. Merton, eminent Columbia University sociologist and humanist; and Ray W. Clough.

in political science and sociology, and then continued his education at the University of Washington, where he earned a master's degree in sociology. He has been working for 12 years as an insurance broker at the Sprague Israel Giles firm in Seattle.

He has a different view than most people about why he went into the field that he did.

"I figured there was no one I knew in insurance brokering and I wouldn't be putting anyone out of a job because no one would be doing what I do," he said.

He said he enjoys his job, which deals with the multi-media in various ways.

Licate is still involved with politics. He does two to three fundraisers a year, helps other people run for office and is also president of the Metropolitan Democratic Club. In 1979 he ran for city council, but lost.

He wrote a novel for children because of the influence of his 14-year-old daughter Eleanor Bianca Licate.

"She wasn't reading a great deal so I thought if I wrote something, she would [read]," he said.

He said his book is a fantasy about a 10-year-old girl who encounters another land that is more modernized, but then wants to find her way back home.

"It's geared on the theme of environmental fantasy," he said.

He is now searching for a publisher that will publish his novel. He presented the book to his daughter, as well.

"She picked it up, but never really did much with it," he said.

Licate said he hopes to write a political novel and a novel about the collective household he has been living in for 12 years.

In 1972, a mansion was purchased by Evergreen Landtrust in Seattle in what was then a marginal neighborhood. The Prague House was purchased for $45,000 and is now worth over a million dollars. The 36-room mansion has 12 people living there, including children. Many of the community activities take place in the house.

Licate said the experience has affected his life a great deal.

"It's very comfortable," he said.

He said a different member of the collective household does the shopping each week and the various chores, and there is also a bank account specifically for the house.

"I might actually start another collective household," he said.

Licate said he is also interested in the culture of Seattle. He loves music and the local bands in the area. There are over 40 bars to choose from.

"I've gotten into modern Japanese music a lot," he said.

He's not only interested in the music of Seattle, but the people and what they do.

"I like to take videos of things going on in Seattle," he said.

He has always been interested in photography and he thinks documenting the people and culture of Seattle is a good way to pursue those interests.

Humane Society offers new friends

by Heather Cvengros and Tracy Todd
The BG News

University students leave more than just parents and friends at home, they also leave their pets.

The Wood County Humane Society, located at 801 Van Camp Road, may be able to ease the loss associated with leaving a pet at home.

Dogs and cats can be adopted from the Humane Society by students who believe they can offer a pet a quality environment.

The society is selective in the adoption process. It is important that the adopter is able to take good care of the pet and will make sure that the animals get their shots regularly, said Peter Gorman, shelter manager.

However, if the Society does not feel comfortable that the adopter will take proper care of the animal, it can refuse the adoption, he added.

The Humane Society is always in need of volunteers. Opportunities are endless and consist of duties such as morning cleaning and pet therapy.

Volunteers also do maintenance on the building and grounds and clean the animals cages, said Mark Catlin, Humane Society volunteer.

Catlin said the society serves a worthwhile purpose in the community.

"There are many animals who need homes," Catlin said. "The society does a good job on making sure the animals get the medical treatment and attention they need."

The Humane Society receives animals in one of three ways: owners bring in pets they can no longer care for; stray cats -- but not dogs -- are taken in; and cruelty cases brought in by the police.

The shelter has a capacity to hold 12 cats and eight dogs each week, said Jeannette Corrigan, assistant manager of the shelter.

About five animals are adopted each week, she added.

When the shelter receives animals, there is a certain process the employees follow. For example, when they receive a cat, the shelter takes the animal to what is called "intake" for a week.

There, the cat is given a worming solution to rid the cat of worms. Then they are given a special exam to test for any diseases. If they test positive, they receive medication.

The cats are also tested for Feline Leukemia. If the test is negative, they receive FeLV vaccination and shots.

The Humane Society will keep the animals until they find a home, unless they have a disease, such as Leukemia. If they are that sick, the animals must be put to sleep, Gorman said.

"It is more humane to put the animal to sleep than to let it suffer, and it prevents the disease from spreading to other animals," Gorman said.

All animals are kept up-to-date with their shots and treatments. Once this is done, they move into "adoption" until they find homes. If the animals are sick, they stay in isolation to prevent the disease from spreading and receive medication.

The Society recommends that the animals be "fixed," Gorman said. The animals do get proper exercise, Gorman said. The shelter has volunteers who play with the animals daily.

If anyone is interested, he or she can talk to Peter Gorman, Monday-Friday, at the Wood County Humane Society at 352-7339.

Judge's decision ignites conflict

by James Hannah
The Associated Press

DAYTON -- The American Civil Liberties Union on Thursday applauded a municipal judge who ruled that Ohio's year-old drunken driving penalties are unconstitutional, while authorities pledged to continue to enforce the law.

"The judge hit the nail on the head regarding the constitutionality of the law," said Chris Link, executive director of the Ohio chapter of the ACLU.

"In an attempt to deal with a serious problem, we've given the police the responsibility that usually falls to the judge. And that's not the way the system works well."

Under the tougher penalties, motorists can lose their licenses on the spot if they fail or refuse a blood-alcohol or chemical test.

Repeat offenders and motorists who drive under suspension may have their plates and registrations impounded, their vehicles immobilized, or their vehicles forfeited, depending on the number of previous violations.

Judge William Kessler of Miami County on Wednesday said the penalties are excessive, put unequal burdens on motorists and violate the Constitution by allowing vehicles to be seized and denying motorists the right to drive before a hearing.

Sgt. John Born, spokesman for the State Highway Patrol, said the penalties are designed to deter first-time offenders and deal with repeat offenders through vehicle seizure.

Camp presents beer samples, education

The Associated Press

FORT MITCHELL, Ky. -- Don't look for postcards claiming homesickness to be sent from a summer camp held across the Ohio River from Cincinnati.

It's Beer Camp time again at the Oldenberg Brewing Co., and once again the session that starts Friday is full. In fact, the camp scheduled for March 1995 is nearly sold out.

"We just said, 'Let's make up some kind of a beer experience,'" Dave Heidrich, Oldenberg's vice president and general manager, said of the idea to highlight the brewery's collection of beer memorabilia. "We thought it'd just be one fun weekend."

It's been so popular that twice a year a full complement of 175 campers pay $250 to $350 per person -- depending on how many people share a motel room -- to attend the three-day camp.

For this session, organizers have assembled 278 kinds of beer for sampling.

"Granted, it's quite silly in a way -- a camp where people can drink hundreds of kinds of beer," said Benjamin Myers, co-chairman of the North American Guild of Beer Writers.

"But it's great -- I could probably count on my hand the number of places where you could find such a fantastic selection at one time."

Campers arrive Friday and are given the camp bible -- a notebook filled with a schedule, recipes for cooking with beer and a list of available beers, their breweries and origins. Campers write their names on their beer-tasting glasses and learn the camp song. ("I'm dying of thirst! So please serve me first!")

Saturday's schedule includes a lesson in beer anthropology, a pub crawl in a trendy Cincinnati neighborhood, more beer tasting and a five-course meal prepared with beer.

Sunday features "hair of the dog" brunch, temperance plays about the evils of drink, group photos and graduation, with certificates from Ale University.

By the end, all can distinguish a double bock from an oatmeal stout.

Diane Suchetka, a 37-year-old newspaper reporter from Charlotte, N.C., said the Beer Camp she attended in March compared favorably with a much loftier experience.

"It was about the most fun I've ever had on a weekend -- except for maybe the Clinton Inauguration," Suchetka said. "But then, you can't really say anything bad about a bunch of people getting together just because they like beer."

She signed up herself and her husband, Henry Gilbert, as a Christmas gift to him and persuaded two friends to go along. Her husband had made one good batch of homemade beer and wanted to improve his skills.

Cincinnati debates gay rights

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI -- The City Council voted Thursday to appeal a federal judge's ruling that a voter-approved city charter amendment violates the constitutional rights of homosexuals.

The council, with councilwoman Bobbie Sterne absent, voted 5-3 to appeal U.S. District Judge S. Arthur Spiegel's Aug. 9 ruling. The council's decision followed a 4-0 vote Wednesday by the council's intergovernmental affairs committee recommending an appeal.

The council's vote means the city will join a private coalition, Equal Rights, Not Special Rights, in appealing Spiegel's decision to the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati.

Equal Rights, Not Special Rights filed its appeal last month. The coalition backed the ballot proposal that Cincinnati voters approved in November, by 62 percent to 38 percent, as a city charter amendment.

The amendment forbids Cincinnati to enact or enforce laws based on sexual orientation. It also eliminates sexual orientation as a basis for discrimination complaints under a human rights ordinance the City Council enacted in 1992.

Gay rights advocates sued immediately in November to block the amendment. They said it was unconstitutional because it would interfere with the First Amendment rights of gays, lesbians and bisexuals to lobby city officials for passage of legislation. Spiegel in November barred the amendment from taking effect until he ruled in the case.

On Aug. 9, the judge permanently blocked the amendment. He said it violated homosexuals' constitutional rights to participate in the political process.

The council on Thursday also approved a resolution saying its decision to appeal does not reflect discrimination toward gays and lesbians.

But a gay-rights group, Stonewall Cincinnati, said a vote to appeal effectively means the city supports discrimination against homosexuals.

"City government will be seen as sanctioning legal discrimination," said Barry Grossheim, interim executive director of Stonewall Cincinnati.

Owners reviewing new plan

by Ronald Blum
The Associated Press

NEW YORK -- With the season just a day away from being canceled, striking baseball players delivered a "taxation" plan to owners Thursday and hoped it would be accepted in place of a salary cap.

Players presented their idea to owners during a 30-minute meeting in the early evening, and owners said they would review it overnight.

"If there's a settlement within reach, or a possibility of that coming, I don't think there's a time frame on this," Los Angeles Dodgers outfielder Brett Butler said.

Soon after the proposal was delivered, acting commissioner Bud Selig said in Milwaukee that the deadline, which he set last week, "still applies."

"Everything is as it's been all along," he said in a telephone interview.

Both sides had said they expected a formal bargaining session to take place Thursday, but it never developed.

Players met with their lawyers and economists for most of the day at the union office in Manhattan. They then walked three blocks to the commissioner's office where three union lawyers delivered the "concept" along with Dodgers pitcher Orel Hershiser, Pittsburgh Pirates shortstop Jay Bell, Texas Rangers pitcher Kevin Brown and Oakland Athletics catcher Terry Steinbach.

"To go without a postseason would be devastating to the game," Butler said. "Nobody is going to win and nobody is winning right now."

The proposal, according to the union, is based on a framework similar to the revenue-sharing agreement owners adopted last January. Instead of a salary cap, however, it includes a taxation concept in which clubs could have any payroll they wanted, but would be forced to share a larger amount of locally generated revenue as their payrolls increased.

"They've got to have a chance to look it over," Brown said.

Negotiations have taken on a sense of urgency since Selig announced the deadline last Friday. The strike, which began Aug. 12 and enters its fifth week Friday, threatens to prevent the World Series from being played for the first time since 1904. It is baseball's eighth work stoppage since 1972.

A group of three team officials met with union lawyers late Wednesday night to discuss the concepts the union was considering. Union head Donald Fehr said the ideas came about from additional information owners provided to players at the start of the Labor Day weekend.

After that meeting ended at about midnight, Colorado Rockies owner Jerry McMorris and Boston Red Sox chief executive officer John Harrington expressed hope that perhaps the season could be saved.

president Stan Kasten, former St. Louis Cardinals CEO Stuart Meyer and Milwaukee Brewers vice president Wendy Selig-Prieb, spent Thursday at the commissioner's office awaiting word from the union.

Falcons concerned about Zips offense

Bowling Green head football coach Gary Blackney and his assistants have been confused by the Akron Zips' offense, even though the contest between the two Mid-American Conference rivals doesn't take place until Saturday.

"Akron is completely different in scheme offensively this year. Unless they go back to the pass and pitch, they're more of a pro-I passing and running attack right now," Blackney said. "We really didn't know it until we got the films this week."

Zips head coach Gerry Faust unleashed his new attack on Temple University last week, but his infant offense remained chained up as the Owls held them to a single touchdown.

"We've been working on defending the pass and pitch offense and we will continue to practice it, because who knows if they'll [Akron] go back into that offense," Blackney said.

Without much success last week, Akron could revert back to its old style or they may just work on trying to develop their raw scheme.

"I don't know what's going through their heads, so we're going to work on defending both offenses," Blackney said.

The Zip offense features a veteran line that protects a new quarterback, Matt Kaulig.

"We think a lot of Matt. He has a lot of savvy and has the confidence of the team," Faust said.

Akron's line protecting Kaulig has a combined 81 career starts and is highlighted by the blocking of All-MAC honorable mentions Eric Agosti and Mike Lyons.

One Falcon that will be trying to crash this experienced line is senior linebacker Vince Palko, who has a score to settle with Faust.

"This game is really big for me. Mr. Faust never even sent a scout to look at me when I was in high school. I really want to play well against him," Palko said.

Palko will be supported by a BG defense that is angered after being picked apart by North Carolina State last week. With a little more support from quarterback Ryan Henry and the rest of the Falcon offense, the defense will look to shut down the Zips, no matter what offensive scheme they use.

The Brown and Orange offense will have to get things in gear in order to complement its defense. The Falcon offensive line blacked out in the second half of the NCSU game as they ran only 11 plays and held the ball for a little more than five minutes.

Falcon rushing stats were also on the verge of nonexistence. The team compiled just 24 yards on 22 carries.

"I was tremendously disappointed in our inability to run the football," Blackney said. "That's an area we are definitely going to have to improve upon."

The Zips and Falcons have met just five times over the last 53 years. The first meeting between the two clubs took place in 1941 and resulted in an 8-0 Akron victory.

Bowling Green leads the series 3-2 and has dominated recently, winning 24-3 in 1992 and 49-7 in last year's contest.

The sixth confrontation between these two rivals will take place at the Rubber Bowl in Akron at 6 p.m.

Soccer team hosting Kwik Goal Classic

by Christian Pelusi
The BG News

After a successful showing last weekend in the Akron Children's Hospital Classic, Bowling Green is hosting its annual Kwik Goal/BGSU Soccer Classic this weekend.

Head coach Gary Palmisano, who worked last year as Director of Operations for the World Cup in Detroit, hopes to take a little bit of that experience and translate it into a better tournament.

"We'd like to produce games different this year," said Palmisano. "I want home games to be more of an event than just a happening."

As a means to that end, the University has enclosed Mickey Cochrane Field to make for a more intimate setting. Not only will this aid fan involvement, it will also speed up the game.

"I think the enclosure will add 15 to 20 percent more playing time," said Palmisano. "Balls will be put back into play quicker, resulting in about 75 out of the 90

Journeyman reaches semifinals

Powerful serves propel Novacek

by Steve Wilstein
The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Karel Novacek, the quintessential journeyman of tennis, served 27 aces against Jaime Yzaga at the U.S. Open on Thursday to reach a Grand Slam semifinal for the first time after 30 early exits.

Novacek, a 29-year-old from the Czech Republic who logs more miles and plays more tournaments than anyone else, relied on his serve to get him out of trouble as he scored a 6-2, 6-7 (7-9), 6-1, 5-7, 6-3 victory over the man who upset defending champion Pete Sampras in the fourth round.

After playing so well against Sampras, Yzaga played sloppily and slow in a terribly tedious match, spraying 73 unforced errors and carrying on a nonstop conversation with himself about his mistakes. He changed his shoes near the end of the first set, changed his rackets several times, but couldn't change the way he was playing.

"The Sampras match took a lot out of me," Yzaga said. "I was sore yesterday and I was sore today. It was hard."

Novacek, who hit 78 unforced errors while playing mostly from the baseline, wasn't much livelier in one of the worst matches of the tournament. There were fans talking on cellular telephones and fans reading newspapers, and long silences were interrupted on occasion by snores and yawns.

Most of those in the two-thirds full stadium awoke at last to cheer Novacek at the end, perhaps grateful that the match was finally over after nearly 3 1/2 hours.

None of that really mattered to Novacek, happy to get this far no matter how he did it. In five previous U.S. Opens, he never got past the third round. Despite his height — at 6-foot-3 he towered eight inches over Yzaga — Novacek's style is best on clay, and hardcourts have rarely been kind to him.

Ranked 56th, Novacek has been a professional since 1984. He's always been a good enough player to threaten the best. He just never came close in the Grand Slams, getting only as far as the quarterfinals at the 1987 French Open.

"It was the dream destination to break the quarterfinals of the Grand Slams, and I am endlessly happy that I did it today," Novacek said. "I won 13 tournaments. I have been playing Davis Cup. I have been playing Masters. I have been playing everything basically that exists in tennis, but I never went to play semifinal of Grand Slams."

Most top players work out their schedules to take breaks during the year. Novacek doesn't take breaks. If he were a factory worker, he'd be at the plant early every morning, lunch box in hand, and his attendance record would be perfect.

He doesn't have to apologize for reaching the semis here, regardless of the quality of the match against Yzaga, though he recognizes he's no longer on the same level with the top players.

"I was once," he said. "I was playing the Masters with them. I was beating them and I was the top eight player in the world in '91. I was always top 20. I was not winning any Grand Slam tournaments, but I was the one who could scare a couple of them."

Price focused after extended vacation

by Bob Green
The Associated Press

OAKVILLE, Ontario — Squeezing every moment of free time he could from a one-week break, Nick Price was a late arrival for the Canadian Open.

Price, who has dominated world golf for the last 2 1/2 years, arrived Wednesday just in time for the pro-am that preceded the Thursday start of this national championship.

"I've only done this once before in my life," Price said, noting he usually arrives at a tournament site on Monday, Tuesday at the latest.

"You can maybe get by with it once or twice, but I won't make a habit of it," Price said.

The delay was necessary, said Price, who has won the British Open, the PGA, a South African title and three American events.

"I was tired. I needed some time at home," Price added after turning his one-week break into a 10-day vacation. "It's like I hit a brick wall [in the third round] at the World Series."

"When you get tired like that, you can't concentrate. There's too much going on. Your mind wanders. I was playing well at the World Series, but I couldn't apply it to the golf course. I was frazzled."

"At the same time, I decided to leave my management company and there were a lot of negotiations going on," Price said. "My wife and I decided to move out of Orlando."

"Things have been pretty hectic for a long time. They're just starting to settle down a little."

So he took a break, "played daddy, took my son to Sea World, things like that. Very relaxing," Price said.

And he's ready to head into a schedule that includes the President's Cup next week, a trip to Scotland, back to Texas, to Japan, to San Francisco, to Hawaii; maybe more.

With that schedule, he even considered not playing here. "My wife didn't want me to. She knew how strung out I was," he said.

"I told her, 'maybe any other tournament, but not the Canadian Open,'" Price said.

"I've played maybe 60, 70 rounds of golf on this course, so it's not like I need to learn it," he said.

The only other time he's made such a late arrival was in Memphis a few years ago, he said, "when my wife was pregnant with our daughter, Robin."

So how did he fare in that tournament?

"I won it," Price said.

Price, who trails the absent Greg Norman by about $47,000 in the race for the money-winning title, wants to make the most of an opportunity to make up ground this week in a tournament that offers $234,000 to the winner.

He faces a 156-man field that includes veterans Bruce Lietzke and Curtis Strange, each a two-time winner of this title.

Retired Simms ripped by Ryan

by Tom Canavan
The Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. -- It wasn't as good as taking credit for the Chicago Bears' Super Bowl victory, or establishing the Philadelphia Eagles' bounty pool, or taking a swing at Kevin Gilbride. Buddy Ryan struck again Wednesday, this time taking a shot at Phil Simms.

The ever up-front Ryan slighted the retired New York Giants quarterback and current ESPN analyst during a telephone conference call by saying the Giants offense was better off with third-year pro Dave Brown running the show.

Ryan, whose Arizona Cardinals play the Giants on Sunday, said he based his opinion on what he saw over the past two seasons, including last season when Simms earned a Pro Bowl berth by leading the Giants to an 11-5 record and a wildcard playoff berth.

"Well, he was around a good football team that moved the football," Ryan said. "I've always liked Phil Simms as a player, but if you want to know the truth... If you don't want to know the truth, I'll tell you. Print it any way you want."

Ryan also made similar comments in Phoenix on Tuesday.

Simms, reached at NFL Films, Inc., in Mount Laurel, N.J., said he had been informed of Ryan's sentiments and did not want to comment.

When asked why Ryan might have made the statements, the 15-year veteran and 1985 Super Bowl MVP said: "Because he's Buddy."

The controversy started when Ryan was asked to give his assessment of Brown, who won the starting job after Simms, 38, was released in a salary cap move before training camp opened.

Brown was 10 of 20 for 171 yards, one touchdown and one interception in his first NFL start, a 28-23 season-opening win over the Eagles Sunday.

"I'm impressed," Ryan told the Giants media corps. "I think the offense is the same offense they've had for years, except they've upgraded the quarterback position."

"Well, that's just my opinion," Ryan added. "He's shown he's got a strong arm. He can run. He's big. I was impressed with him."

Brown, who prefers to speak with the media only on Thursdays, was not immediately available for comment.

When told that Ryan would rather face Simms than Brown, Giants coach Dan Reeves smiled for a second.

"That's probably true since Phil is not playing," Reeves said. "Buddy can say what he wants to. He's definitely got an opinion, that's one thing about Buddy."

Most of the Giants laughed after hearing of Ryan's comments.

"I don't know where he's coming from," wide receiver Mike Sherrard said. "Dave has done great so far. Buddy makes his comments and, right or wrong, he has his reasons. As a team, we are confident in Dave. We know he can play well and we'll just go about our jobs."

Safety John Booty, who played for Ryan in Philadelphia, said it was just another case of Buddy being Buddy.

"You know, Dave Brown is an up and coming quarterback, so I look at it as a compliment to Dave," Booty said.

Linebacker Corey Miller, one of the few Giants who openly likes to talk trash, laughed the hardest at Ryan's comments.

"He is going to say whatever," Miller said between laughs. "He doesn't care who it is. The thing about Buddy Ryan is he is going to speak his mind. He doesn't care who it hurts or who it is, he is going to let you know how he feels about you. That's the bottom line and I respect that."

"If he thinks we upgraded ourselves at quarterback, that's his opinion," Miller added.

Pittsburgh hoping to sneak out of Cleveland with win

by Chuck Melvin
The Associated Press

BEREA, Ohio -- In Vinny Testaverde's estimation, no matter how young the season might be, it's crunch time for the Cleveland Browns.

The Browns must take a back-to-the-wall attitude into Sunday's home game against the Pittsburgh Steelers, Testaverde said, because the history of the series tells you the Browns can count on having a difficult time at Pittsburgh in December.

"It's important for us to at least win this one at home, because it's much tougher to go in there and win," Testaverde said. "We should count it as a must-win game. Pittsburgh's place will be a much tougher environment."

Over the years, the Steelers have been the Browns' biggest rivals. A drive of less than three hours separates the two cities, situated close enough for some of Cleveland's radio talk shows to reach listeners in the Pittsburgh area.

The rowdy crowds have made Cleveland Stadium as unfriendly to the Steelers as Three Rivers has been to the Browns. Pittsburgh has lost 11 of its last 12 games in Cleveland, a stretch reminiscent of the Browns' 16 straight losses at Pittsburgh from 1970-85.

Sunday's meeting also will give the Browns a chance to go two games up on the Steelers in the AFC Central.

"It's something if you continue to win, but it's nothing if you squander it later in the year," Testaverde said.

That's precisely what happened last year. Cleveland won the first meeting in October 28-23, largely on the strength of Eric Metcalf's two punt returns for touchdowns, to improve to 5-2.

But Testaverde, who had replaced Bernie Kosar as Cleveland's starting quarterback the previous week, injured his shoulder on a 9-yard scramble in the fourth quarter against the Steelers and missed four games over the next five weeks, contributing to a second-half slide that left the Browns out of the playoffs for the fourth straight season.

minutes being action."

Palmisano also cited rule changes, such as the goalkeeper having five seconds to play the ball and the goalkeeper having to use his feet on balls played back by a teammate, as other reasons why games should be more wide open.

"It forces teams to stretch their defenses back farther, even to the goaltender to pressure the ball," Palmisano said. "It also requires teams to be more technically skilled and better decision makers."

That is a phase of the game Palmisano has been very pleased with this season, citing play from his backers Tony Dore, Peter Kolp and Dave Michels and goalkeeper Dan Traver. Palmisano noted their consistency.

"If we can continue to get the mid-fielders and forwards coming back in support of those guys, we'll be in good shape," Palmisano said.

INSIDE FALCON FOOTBALL

Five years ago Vince Palko was passed over by Gerry Faust and the rest of the Akron Zips coaching staff.

Saturday, Palko will be making tackles left and right at The Rubber Bowl – the Zips home field – but just like the last four years he'll be doing it for Bowling Green.

When I was in high school Mr. Faust never even sent a scout to look at me so I can't wait to go back home and show him what he passed up.

What Faust passed up may just be the best linebacker that the Mid-American Conference has ever seen. Palko, reigning MAC Defensive MVP and Butkus Award nominee, has anchored one of the top defensive teams in the country the last three years.

This year Palko has set his sights on winning the MAC title for the third time in the last four years. The long road starts against Faust, who is still looking for that elusive title.

Description of play and responsibilities:

This is a play that would go to the running back. On this play I'm looking for a down block from the guard. Then the fullback will come through and try to isolate me. My responsibility is to hit the fullback one-yard deep behind the offensive line. When I hit the fullback I'm trying to get outside leverage and force the runner back into the inside toward the "Mike" linebacker. It's a pretty easy play to read because it opens up so quickly.

“Quotable” VINCE PALKO

"I can remember coming in as a freshman and being in awe of all the other players. Sometimes I played a little bit scared during practice, I didn't want to make any mistakes. But I think that helped me because it made me concentrate a little more and learn the plays faster."

About being nominated for the Butkus Award:

"The first time I found out was when I saw the list on my locker. I was surprised. But at the same time very thankful to my teammates because team success is a prerequisite to personal success."

"I have always set goals for myself. My first year here my goal was to be a starter. In my second season I wanted to be the best linebacker at BG. Then I wanted to be the best linebacker in the MAC. And this year I've set a goal to again be the best linebacker in the MAC, and also to gain some national recognition."

About continuing football career after graduation:

"I've thought about it a little bit, but I've never gotten too wrapped up in it. I think that there are a lot of things that I have to work on before that could happen – things like improving my speed and quickness."

"Really though, Vince Palko has to worry about this season and what needs to be done in order to win another MAC Championship."

"Who knows what the Good Lord has in store for me. I'm not going to think about it, but if I continue to work hard and do the things I've done in the past then maybe I'll get a shot at it."

About his interest in art:

"My mom got me started into art at a young age. Whenever I was bored I always seemed to just pick up a pencil and start drawing different things. She kept hanging my drawings all over the house and encouraged me to keep it up."

"Drawing was just something that I've always loved to do, and hopefully I'll be able to continue doing it as a career. I'd like to be a graphic designer working in a large market like Chicago or Atlanta."

Before there was a city of Bowling Green, let alone a University, there was swampland. Everywhere one looked, bugs buzzed, moss grew, algae prospered and tree roots exposed themselves.

From these roots, new roots were made as settlers came and did their best to make the swampland agricultural. They drained the Black Swamp and from it came its largest community, Bowling Green. The rest is history, and a very rich, deeply-rooted history at that.

And from that history has evolved the annual Black Swamp Arts Festival. The event is a celebration of the arts and culture that exist in both the University and community as well as a chance for people to come together as neighbors. With over 8,000 people coming out to the festival last year despite nasty weather, it must be said that it is a very big deal!

Where else on Earth can a once dreary swamp become a center of community culture and the arts? Where else in the universe? I can tell you it's not in the Dagobah System, and I'm sure Yoda is one envious little gremlin.

Where food and fun collide

Junction Bar & Grill offers comfortable atmosphere

by Janet Oyen

I had the pleasure of dining at Junction Bar & Grill on Main Street in downtown Bowling Green. This restaurant has a casual atmosphere; there is a jukebox playing in the background, the walls are decorated with the usual beer signs plus fifties paraphernalia, including a Revlon eye-make-up kit, and the dining room is set with wooden tables and wicker chairs with seat cushions. The center pieces consist of condiments and a list of alcoholic drinks and dinner specials. The dining room is well-lit with ceiling lamps.

The spacious dining room is complimented with a raised platform in the back. This is the location of the jukebox, a pool table, and an electronic dart board; fine entertainment for the college crowd. I had a good time hanging out and playing darts. This kind of entertainment can turn a nice dinner into a fun evening out.

The menu offers a variety of dishes including sandwiches, burgers, chicken, Mexican and vegetarian meals. These dishes range from a bacon mushroom burger to a Mexican salad to a gyro to grilled chicken to the veggie fajita. There is also a wide selection of appetizers from mozzarella sticks to potato skins to nachos. All of the meals come in large portions. The prices are also very reasonable, there are only a few dishes over five dollars.

I ordered stuffed mushrooms for an appetizer and the veggie fajita. The stuffed mushrooms were stuffed with herbs and cream cheese then fried; they were delicious. The veggie fajita was filled with cheese and fresh. My waitress was soon asking for drink orders. She came by several times for drink refills and to ask about the food. She even asked about me. The service was speedy, but not rushed. I took my time to enjoy my meal, but did not have to wait for the next course or a drink refill to come.

Junction Bar & Grill is a great place for college students because of its relaxed atmosphere, the reasonable prices and the good food. The next time you want to take a break from cafeteria and fast food and have a fun evening out, keep Junction Bar & Grill in mind.

QUIZ

out that all entries go to 210 WEST HALL!!!!!! You people should be able to read minds by now!

Like last week and every week, winners will be selected following Wednesday's Results. The winner will receive a free promotional cassette or compact disc from the Madhatter Music Co., 143 E. Wooster. If there is a tie, or many ties, then the winner will be determined through a blowtorch test; the last entry unburned will be the victor. Pretzel believes it's better to burn out than fade away!

This week's winner was none other than Chad Wedeven of 17 Prout. Congratulations, Chad!!! Enjoy the music. And for the rest of you that got left out, here's this week's quiz:

1. What was After the Fire's only hit? (Hint: Falco sang the same song, only much cheesier - and the title is German).
2. What was the Duran Duran song used in a James Bond movie in 1985?
3. What former Van Halen frontman sang "Yankee Rose" in 1987?
4. The line "Don't waste your money on a new set of speakers, you get more mileage from a cheap pair of sneakers..." is from what song, by who?
5. Who sang "U' Got the Look" with Sheena Easton?
6. What was Dee-Lite's "groovy" hit in 1990?
7. Who sang "867-5309/Jenny" in 1981?
8. These "babbling faces" sang "Burning Down the House" in 1983. Who were they?
9. What Aussie band sang "Money Talks" in 1990?
10. Dire Straits sang what song in 1985 with additional vocals from Sting?

Kevin Staas

Novice stone carver takes shot at selling pieces of art at the Black Swamp Arts Festival

Andy: What kind of art do you do, Kevin?

Kevin: I carve stones.

Andy: How did you get involved with the Black Swamp Arts Festival?

Kevin: I applied. I had to submit four slides of my artwork and there was a committee that viewed all the applicants and I was accepted. I'm in the non-juried section; I won't be competing for any prizes.

Andy: So are you just going to be showing off your stuff or are you going to be selling it, or what?

Kevin: I'll be selling it.

Andy: How much are you going to charge?

Kevin: I don't know—I haven't even decided yet. I'm not sure because I've only been carving for a year or so.

Andy: How did you get involved in carving?

Kevin: It's a long story. The first piece I ever carved was with Danielle Barron, and I carved a cement pipe in her art class. Everyone thought it was a pot.

Andy: Why a pipe?

Kevin: Because my dad smokes a pipe, is why. He got me started in carving when he came home one day with some chisels and rock for me to work with a little over a year ago and I've been doing it ever since.

Andy: Were you in the festival last year?

Kevin: I got accepted, but I had my initiation for my fraternity that day, so I had to cancel.

Andy: What fraternity, Kev?

Kevin: Um....Sigma Chi (nervous laugh).

What kind of art pieces will you be selling at the festival?

Kevin: They're all sculptures out of soft stones, like alabaster and limestone. I mostly carve animals. And I'm just, like, starting to do humans. They're kind of harder for me.

Andy: How many pieces are you going to have there?

Kevin: I'm going to have about 12 pieces for sale. Some of them are small.

Andy: How long does it take, on average, to make a piece.

Kevin: It depends, like if I work on it straight through. I can do an average piece in three days, but I just got done with a piece that took me all summer.

Andy: What is it?

Kevin: An Indian head.

Andy: Are you going to sell it?

Kevin: Yes.

Andy: Have you ever sold a piece before?

Kevin: No, never. I kind of don't want to sell it because I spent so much time on it. I always tell myself throughout the summer when I'm carving that I want to make some income off it. I could have had a second job or something, but I didn't.

Ross (the photographer): Um...are we open to any questions here?

Kevin: I'm the feature and it's my life so you can ask me about anything.

Ross: Well, ok. One thing we shouldn't forget is that you are a swimmer, correct?

You are a member of the University swim team.

Kevin: Yes, that is correct.

Ross: Do you ever urinate in the pool?

Kevin: I refuse to answer that on the grounds of possibly incriminating myself.

Ross: I don't believe that will be incriminating.

Kevin: I don't think I like the way this is going.

Andy: Kev, you're a pretty busy man on campus. What other things do you do in your life?

Kevin: Well, I'm doing the art, I'm a member of Sigma Chi, I'm on USG in the student welfare committee. I was also an RA one summer, if you want to put that in. Oh, hey, I'm also doing research with my psych professor, Kerry Hefner.

Ross: Any relation to Hugh?

Kevin: No.

Andy: What has been one of your biggest disappointments?

Kevin: I'm kind of upset that I didn't win the Pretzel Boy music quiz.

Andy: Are you gonna play this week?

Kevin: Yeah. At least let me ask you an Early 80s question.

Andy: Okay.

Kevin: What song has the line "365 degrees?"

Andy: "Burning Down the House" off the 1983 album Speaking in Tongues, Sire Records.

Kevin: Damn it, Duges!

Ross: What's your major?

Kevin: I'm a double major in psychology and history.

Ross: Now I'm curious. Since you're a double major in psychology and history does that mean you're going to do study the history of psychology?

Kevin: I am interested in that.

There's a thing called psychohistory, where famous figures are analyzed. Erik Erikson did a study on Martin Luther King Jr. and Hitler. It's not really accepted.

yet. I'm also interested in that explanatory style research. That's what I'm doing with my professor. He's sponsoring me.

Andy: That's a lot going on. Would you consider all these things hobbies?

Kevin: Uh...yeah.

Hobbies or just interests. The USG thing is kind of like a job, but I kind of like doing that stuff.

Andy: Do you see yourself involved with this kind of art in the future?

Kevin: Yeah, but kind of more on the side to whatever I end up doing.

Andy: What do you think about the Black Swamp Arts Festival?

Kevin: I think it's nice to have something local where people from around here can go and show off their stuff.

Andy: So, when will you have your stuff on display?

Kevin: I set up shop on Saturday at 10 a.m. and I think it starts at noon and goes until 8 p.m. And I do requests!

Second Black Swamp

Some Kind of wonderful
Local band headlines festival with authentic sound and style

by Dorian Halkovich

Tonight one of Bowling Green's most popular happenings is set to engulf downtown in artistic creativity and boisterous vocal chords. The Black Swamp Arts Festival is full of handmade items and creative endeavors but it is also a focal point for local musical talent to reach wandering ears as they pass from booth to booth. Among them will be The Kind.

Frequently playing a circuit of shows throughout Cleveland, Columbus, Toledo, Ann Arbor and Bowling Green, the band has cemented their name into some fairly large markets. As a result, The Kind earned an opening spot during Phil Collin's most recent tour.

"We were very excited to be offered the spot," lead vocalist and lyricist, Jaime Church said. "We had worked with a promotions company in the past and they just called us up and asked us to play."

As a six-piece band complete with a female vocalist, The Kind definitely has an original sound. Their fuller instrumental base has given them a flexibility few bands ever achieve.

"I would describe our musical style as high-energy pop. It's definitely dance music," Church said. "We've got an original sound so you can't really compare us to any one band."

Influenced by everything from reggae to pop, Church admitted some of her main influences lie in bands with strong female vocalists. Some of her favorites are the Pretenders and the B-52's.

"Being a female vocalist, I've always been interested in strong female vocalists instead of those who are just back-up singers," Church said.

The Kind will headline the Black Swamp Arts Festival. The band goes on at 8 p.m. on the main stage and then will play at Easy Street at 10 p.m.

Although she is willing to reveal her influences, Church declined to comment on the origin of the band's name. Instead she simply stated "we like to leave that up to everyone's imagination."

"The band will have been together two years in January," Church explained. "Joe [Church] and I have been together for about five years. We played as a two-person acoustic act and when we came back to Bowling Green we met up with the rest of the band members."

After checking out the competition in New York, Church migrated back to Bowling Green where "most of the band is either from or went to school." Members include Joe Church, guitarist, songwriter and vocals; Jose Luna, percussionist, vocals and songwriter; Linda Gurney, keyboardist and vocalist; Jim Armstrong, guitarist; and Mike Bailey on drums. Together, they are responsible for mixing their varied interests and influences to make that unique Kind sound.

The band currently has two EP's available at MadHatter's Music entitled "High," a six-song studio EP and "Live at the Phantasy," a seven-song EP.

They are also set to record an album by the end of September in New York for Interface Records.

Before that happens, though, check them out live at their 8 p.m. performance at the Black Swamp Arts Festival tonight or right after (around 11 p.m.) at the Easy Street Cafe where they will perform once again.

Black Swamp Arts Festival begins

The Land Before Time

Once a tree-filled swampland, Bowling Green has emerged

by Sharon A. Turco

It's hard to believe that the miles of flat, spacious farmland that surrounds Bowling Green was once a tree-filled swampland left behind by the mighty glacial era — but that's exactly what existed here 100 years ago.

Tonight kicks off the second annual Black Swamp Arts Festival with the high energy blues group Big Dave and the Ultrasonics, but that's only one event in the three day celebration of the visual and performing arts that is meant to capture Bowling Green's rich historical culture.

Proposed two years ago by Arts Allied and The Downtown Business

Association, the festival is celebration of the arts which promotes economic growth and a strong community spirit.

"The purpose of The Black Swamp Festival is to create an awareness of arts and foster a strong community spirit," said Jacqueline Nathan, co-chairwoman of the event and head of University Galleries. "We want people to be proud of our community and show it off."

And there's a lot to show off.

Stretching from Lake Erie to Indiana, The Great Black Swamp was the last area of Ohio to be settled.

It wasn't until the 1850s that settlers from Northern Germany realized that under the thick forests and wetlands lay what would some day become the richest farmland in Ohio.

"It took tremendous work to make this area farmable," said Thomas Anderson, a University geography professor. "The first settlers removed every tree by hand and built a great many drainage ditches without the aid of technology."

A small portion of the area was developed previous to the Civil War but it wasn't until post-Civil War that the major work began.

"Federal laws allowed for subsidies to help drain the swampland," said David Skaggs, a University history professor. "It's almost ironic — today, we would never allow such wetlands to be destroyed, but in the 1900s little consideration was given to the environment and to the land."

Without the migration of the Germans to this area, the land never could have been developed such as it was. "The Germans improved on the original drainage ditches being used at the time, and began building drainage tiles," Skaggs said. "They are still in place today and can be seen from the road."

The University lies directly in the center of the Black Swamp. "It's very obvious geographically that we lie in the center of the Black Swamp because there is no drainage from a natural body of water," Skaggs said. "There are a series of ditches that lead out of the city."

Bowling Green is the largest community completely inside the swamp. It was profitable agriculturally thus attracting settlers as time went on.

"It's difficult to look at the farmlands this region is famous for and picture that it was once a vast area of swampland," Anderson said. "But a large part of Bowling Green's history lies in the changing of our land."

Not only will this history be captured in The Black Swamp Arts Festival but our changing community will also be celebrated.

The festival originally started as a small idea, but it has taken off on a large scale since first introduced.

Eight thousand people attended the festival last year despite desolate weather — which is one of the main reasons the festival is being hosted earlier in September this year.

"The Black Swamp Arts Festival ties together a region that shares a rich history with Bowling Green at the heart of it," said Jim Tinker, director of The Downtown Business Association. "It shows that we are current but we have a heritage and there is a deep-rooted history here."

The Black Swamp Mural, created this year, depicts this rich historical culture, and can be seen all year round on Main Street.

"A festival such as this defines our town as a center for the arts," said Kelly Wicks, owner of Grounds for Thought.

"The University is rich in the arts which benefits the town culturally," Tinker said.

Another benefit that the festival brings to the community is a common bond between the town and the University.

"Downtown is a common ground for both the city and the University," Tinker said. "It's a place where everyone becomes part of the community and togetherness prevails."

Several members on the planning committees are a part of the University community and many of the performers have University ties as well. University students also play a vital role in making the festival a success.

"Many of the 250 volunteers that help out are University students," Tinker said. "Whole organizations come out to lend a helping hand."

Although originally anticipated to give area businesses extra publicity, the overwhelming response that last year's festival brought was never expected. "Some of our downtown businesses compared last year's festival to Christmas in terms of business generated," Tinker said.

A survey conducted at last year's festival shows that 94 percent of festival goers would return this year and 42 percent said they would eat in an area restaurant or would purchase something from an area business. All said that by far the best aspect of the festival was the music and community spirit.

Seventy-five artists from five states will be showcasing their work.

"We want to stress that this is not a little craft show — it's the biggest music and arts festival in Bowling Green's history," Tinker said.

Tinker feels that the Black Swamp Arts Festival is the beginning of a scene.

"We want to help area artists become known," Tinker said. "In the future we hope to produce a Compact Disk called 'Out of the Swamp.'"

"For now though it's one huge dance party all weekend," Tinker said. "It's a welcome back party and a cultural event mixed together."

Tesla
Bust A Nut
Geffen Records

Jeff Keith and crew are back yet again with another album chock full of their bluesy riffs, pumping rhythm and Keith's easily recognizable grainy vocals.

Whether or not you are a Tesla fan, you most likely can recall their Top 10 single "Love Song," off 1989's The Great Radio Controversy, or the Top 10 hit "Signs" from 1990's Five Man Acoustical Jam.

Signs, signs every-where signs... That's Tesla and if you recognize those popular words or even hear the elusive lyrics buzzing through your head then you have an idea of what you will get with their latest release Bust A Nut.

Tesla weaves their pure musical style throughout Bust A Nut. Known best for their straightforward music and their popular motto: NO MACHINES!, the band has once again sent forward an album worth a listen. Their fifth album since 1989 off Geffen Records, gives listeners a taste of what they're used to hearing with a little heavier groove mixed in for good measure.

The CD opens with "The Gate/Invited." I was a little surprised to hear some pretty heavy guitar work resounding out of my meager speakers. Some of the riffs seemed almost reminiscent of older and slower Metallica. But the guitar work was clear and obviously unaltered and Keith's voice maintains authoritative control of the song instead of being buried beneath pounding percussion and screaming guitars like many vocalists seem to hopelessly do. "The Gate/Invited" seems to play with the question of where am I going with my life...something we all can relate to.

"You ask where I'm going/I don't even know where myself/I could say I'm undecided/I just don't know."

The album continues to twist through typical rock and roll songs with some similar beats and "rock-n-roll" style lyrics until entering some bluesy cuts. One of the better cuts is "Need Your Lovin'." Although it is your typical love song of "what would I do without you" sentimentality, the bluesy twang and rangy guitar work deserves a fair amount of credit for clarity and purely enjoyable listening.

As good as "Need Your Lovin'" is, I'd have to say the best cut on the CD "A Lot To Lose." The cut is more like a ballad with a pretty slow musical introduction, reminiscent of light chime-like guitar work.

Another cut that deserves a second listen is "Games People Play." With an almost folk-like and gospel sound it speaks to the listener.

This CD is definitely worth a listen.

Milo Z
Basic Need to Howl
Mercury

After four years of labor in New York City's gritty club scene, Milo Z has released a promising debut album entitled "Basic Need to Howl." The funk septet attempts to make the difficult leap from live performance to studio recording.

The diverse group's first release is in every sense of the word a "debut" album, chocked full of the do's and don'ts of studio musicianship. Judging from the live reviews, much of the band's true flavor appears to have been compromised in the name of marketability.

The first two tracks are listenable, if not quite catchy. "Get On Up," the funky, infectious opener, and "Dog" both feature searing guitar solos from Shimizu. A native of Japan, Shimizu is an extremely capable guitarist whose presence on the album is felt on each of the dozen tracks (and desperately needed on several). His playing is quite diverse, a combination of quality fills, scorching solos, and rich, exquisite (and sometimes overdubbed) rhythm guitarwork. "Want Me," the eighth track, would surely falter without his outstanding rhythm background. The vocals are that bad.

Horrendous vocals are but one of the low points of "Howl." Cheesy, inane lyrics are at the front of each song. Several songs boldly attempt to make political and social statements, yet they're penned so tastelessly that the result is sheer disaster.

Milo Z, the lead vocalist, may have founded this septet, but his foresight stops there. His singing style, intended to be richly funky, becomes more and more irritating after each song.

Producers have apparently tried to exploit the idea that the lead vocalist and the band's namesake are both called Milo Z. This is a great marketing idea, but as a musical concept it falls short. Keep in mind that such harsh criticism is warranted by the fact that the instrumentals in "Howl" are really sharp. Shimizu's outstanding funk guitarwork, the intermittent but scorching sax solos, solid bass and percussions, and smatterings of "Daddy Eyes" Hopkins' tasty keyboard fills make for a talented and promising group of musicians with bright futures.

Instrumentally, Milo Z seems ill-suited for Top 40. Their songs have a natural tendency to stretch out, with lots of soloing and improv. However, Milo Z undoubtedly would like to enjoy commercial success. It will be interesting to see what direction the group takes, artistically and musically, in the years to come.

Peter John Ross
The Basement Tapes
Vol. 1 - Monkey

The title for Peter John Ross' work could not be more apropos because "The Basement Tapes" is exactly what the sounds on this CD brought to mind, a recording done in the basement.

A soft, soothing feeling is what comes from the first instrumental track "Smooth Part 1". However, the following tracks sound more and more like synthesized music.

After the first few seconds of "Surfer Joe", I started to think of an instrument that I had not heard nor seen since I was in the sixth grade, the mini-organ. All I could picture while listening to this song was a stereotypical grandparent sitting at the mini-organ from which one of those dull tempo beats sounded as the grandparent continued to play along on the keys.

Going into "Camino Fuente" I felt a calm jazzy tone as if I were in a club on a weekend evening with a close friend.

Throughout this whole CD the music sounded too close to a keyboard synthesizer for my own taste. I do think that with the instrumental music each track was designed to create an image for the listener. However, twenty-two songs is a little too much.

My personal favorite was the track entitled "The First Time." I liked the use of the piano. If you decide to buy this CD, listen to this track first. The free flowing, easy spirit sound heard in this piece is bound to bring back a memory or two.

Peter John Ross is a local musical artist. This CD is available at Finders, Madhatter and Imagine: The Unique Boutique.
